With a $50,000 racing car, they weren't about to scrimp on the ignition coil.

So they got an Autolite coil.

Almost a carbon copy of the one you buy. For under $10.

This car was built to race in the Indianapolis 500. Built to win regardless of cost. It's got a $20,000 engine. A $2,000 fuel-injection system. And the ignition coil?

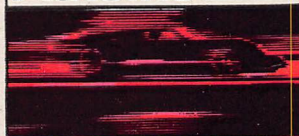

It's an Autolite coil. Almost a carbon copy of the one you buy. For under $10.

How come a low-price Autolite coil in a high-price racing car? Because there is no better coil. At any price.

Put this kind of coil—in fact, a complete Autolite ignition system—in your kind of car. Whatever kind you drive.

Autolite . . . the one name for spark plugs, batteries, filters, shock absorbers and complete ignition systems.

as we see it

■ We can hardly wait to see General de Gaulle open the Winter Olympic Games at 9 A.M., Tuesday, Feb. 6.

It's not that we're so anxious to see the old fumph himself—we're just curious to see how ABC handles the live coverage (via satellite) from Grenoble.

■ The network paid $2 million to the French Olympic Committee (which means France) for the privilege of carrying exclusive coverage of the Winter Games in the United States. The plan is to carry some 27 hours of coverage between Feb. 4 and Feb. 18—everything from a pre-Olympic special to prime-time hours every night, special weekend coverage, and nightly 15-minute wrapups. Add to the $2 million more millions for personnel, travel, production, satellite time and U.S. cable time and the figure becomes more impressive.

ABC will be working with ORTF, the French government TV system, in its Olympic coverage. It will use its own cameras because the French use a different transmission system. And this poses a touchy problem.

■ The General, as chief of state, will participate in the opening-day ceremonies. The French already have planned the route he will take and have transmitted it to the foreign press. They also have let it be known that De Gaulle does not like to see foreign television cameras operating in France. Would ABC, then, kindly keep its cameras back where the General can't see them?

Presumably, then, ABC will either resort to long lenses to cover the opening ceremonies or will have to rely upon French coverage and mechanical means to change the picture from the French system to ours.

■ Imagine, $2 million and he doesn't like to see foreign cameras! That's real gall.

Chef Boy-Ar-Dee® fools your kids every time.

They think they're getting a treat, but they're really getting good solid protein. Just one serving of Chef Boy-Ar-Dee Spaghetti and Meat Balls has more protein than most lunchtime soups or

The princess and the play

Things got a bit tense when Jacqueline Kennedy's sister became a TV actress

By Robert Musel

They cut the lights, finally, at 1 A.M. after 10 days of the most prolonged and painstaking taping in small-screen history. All that man and electronics could do had been done to make a television star out of Lee Bouvier, sister of Jacqueline Kennedy. Now the verdict was up to the audience that will watch the Jan. 17 ABC-TV Movie Night Special presentation of the famous old mystery thriller "Laura."

Deflated by the effort, cast and technicians dispersed wearily into the damp, cool night from the Intertel Studios at Wembley on the rim of London; some to hotels, some to their homes. And Miss Bouvier to an elegant Georgian house close by Buckingham Palace where, once past the threshold, she becomes Princess Radziwill to her servants.

As the lights went out, a remarkable chapter in the continuing story of show business came to an end. We may not for a long time witness another attempt to create instant stardom, whether or not the critics uphold those who placed on Miss Bouvier's untried shoulders the fate of a major two-hour television project.

Society Girl Becomes Overnight Star—now there's a plot that producer David Susskind would have laughed out of his office. He did very little laughing at Wembley. He was trying with all the guile and wile of years of experience to make the unbelievable come true in real life because, so the story goes, ABC insisted it was worth a try and argued that in any event his reputation did not depend on any single production.

Arlene Francis, one of the stalwarts he chose to help him in his task, marveled at the cooperation behind and in front of the camera to support Miss Bouvier.

"Of course, she's no threat to the Duses of the world," she said, "but I think she'll come out well. I didn't think so at first; she's had no time to develop her talent or her technique. But everybody went to great trouble and did everything they could to help her. She was handled with tender loving care and she'll come out smelling like a rose. Her performance is a tribute to what can be done with a camera, boom shots, writing, lighting, direction and patience. And she looks ravishingly beautiful."

Miss Francis was less enthusiastic about the way she herself will look.

"It made me quite ill," she said wryly. "One knows one is not a ravishing beauty but one also hopes one will not shock one. If you're not the star, they don't put all the lights on you. Not like What's My Line? — that was heavenly. The studio doesn't have enough room yet for all the lights but they do it for the star."

"But how about your scenes with Miss Bouvier?"

"That," said Miss Francis, "is when you die."

The Bouvier Story would make a fascinating TV documentary. Miss Bouvier shared with her older sister, Jackie, the abundant life that goes with wealth and social position—fashionable schools, fashionable summer resorts, friendships with the influential. She says she had a strong feeling for acting at college but never took it much beyond that. She married a diplomat attached to the U.S. Embassy in London. The marriage failed and she married Prince Stanislas Radziwill, a real-estate millionaire and a descendant of the kings of Poland.

Ever since school the idea that she was suppressing a genuine talent for the stage had been in her mind. But she had had two children with Radziwill — Antony, 8, and Tina, 7—and sister Jackie's husband, John F.

Kennedy, had become President of the United States. Miss Bouvier refers to this time as "the political years," when as sister-in-law to an American President it would have been impossible for her to do anything about her ambition without appearing to trade on the Kennedy name.

She adored her martyred brother-in-law, campaigned for him so late in her pregnancy that she almost lost the child and her health. President Kennedy, in turn, flew to England with his wife in 1961 ostensibly to see the British Prime Minister but equally to be godfather at Tina's christening. According to protocol the Kennedys should have stayed with the Ambassador; instead they stayed at the Radziwills'.

This sisterly act opened the great iron gates of Buckingham Palace. The Kennedys were invited to dine with Queen Elizabeth and other members of the royal family. Naturally so were their hosts, the Radziwills.

Along the years Miss Bouvier had been meeting other creative people—she was an advertising copywriter for a while, then assistant to the editor of Harper's Bazaar. She ran a fashion show at the Brussels World Fair in 1958, has appeared regularly on the list of Best Dressed Women and posed, as a fashion personality, for a 10-page layout in Vogue magazine. One of these artistic friends, writer Truman Capote, is credited with persuading her to do something about her dream of acting.

Private coaching for two years convinced her he was right. Last June she made her debut in Chicago as the star of a revival of the play "The Philadelphia Story."

It was her first time on any professional stage. She was 34 years old.

This was more an act of courage than of ego. The Kennedy Clan does not offer itself to ridicule, and this possibility existed. Miss Bouvier is not only a strikingly attractive woman, she is an intelligent one and she knew her publicity value was more important in getting the role than her as yet unproved acting ability. There was bound to be envy from those who had clawed their way up in show business from the tank towns, and from others.

Why take the risk?

"If I didn't," she says, "I'd never know if I had it in me. I'm not a woman playing at a hobby. This was something I had wanted to do for a long time."

There was international interest in her debut—too much interest. High position carries with it penalties as well as privileges. Her performance was not so much observed as dissected. She received few of the allowances that might have been made for an unknown actress. "A star is not born," wrote one reviewer. The consensus was that she was an enthusiastic beginner who was not yet an actress but might become one with time. One of the cast was even quoted as saying he had to work hard to pull her through.

Inwardly Miss Bouvier was hurt. Outwardly she maintained the view that the reviews were good—as indeed they were, considering what they might have been. ABC-TV, at least, must have been impressed, for it asked Susskind to watch the show in Chicago with a view to starring her in "The Voice of the Turtle," which Capote was to adapt for his protégé. Susskind — under what industry sources believe was strong network pressure—took the assignment but rejected "The Voice of the Turtle." Miss Bouvier wasn't ready yet for the exposure of a play with only three characters.

Instead he had Capote adapt "Laura," with its tense, 10-minute building for the first appearance of the star—as sure-fire an entrance as there is around at the moment. He packed a solid phalanx of professionals around her—Robert Stack, George Sanders, Farley Granger, Miss Francis, and director John Moxey. Susskind always goes first class. To paint the portrait of Laura that dominates one set, he flew over well-known Jan de Ruth, and Miss Bouvier sat for him for three weeks.

I talked to him standing before the portrait. Earlier Susskind had given a general chat on great acting (with special emphasis on the economy of motion of such stars as Katharine Hepburn) to a group that included Miss Bouvier. It might even have been for her benefit.

"I really think she'll be a star," he said. "A star is one who attracts an audience. They'll tune in in untold numbers. They may tune in to scoff and jeer. But I think they'll have to swallow their scorn and admit she did a good job. She has charm and elegance, rare equipment, enormous"—he searched for the word—"panache."

"Analogies are odious, but she's like Grace Kelly. She has that quality. As for her acting, it's like tennis. If you play a better player than you are, you play better. In 'Laura' she is at the top of her potential. They've [the cast] been kind and good to her."

The sentences snapped out.

"I don't care about criticism for giving her the role. The question is, can she do it? What if she is Jackie's sister? I don't know, probably she wouldn't have gotten it if she wasn't. But I saw enough of her in Chicago to convince me that under the right circumstances she would do all right. She doesn't trade on her position; she works hard."

Susskind also worked hard. He chopped the shooting into many brief scenes—presumably, so Miss Bouvier would not have to generate any extended display of emotion—although this method of "discontinuous" filming has evoked union grumbling in the past because of the extra work involved.

Miss Bouvier arrived, lovely in a brown velvet suit trimmed with sable. Designer Julie Harris, a large, handsome blonde, thought over a question on how she went about dressing a woman already noted for her own fashion taste. "Thereby hangs a tale," she replied grimly, but she would not tell it. "I wanted her to be comfortable," she went on. "Considering the circumstances, I've let her have her own way in most things. But if I ever did something with her again, I'd want more of my ideas."

Later I wandered up to the dressing room and asked Miss Bouvier what she thought of all this. She is → a slender blonde of medium height with the facial bone structure of a young Dietrich. It is an enormously attractive face and I could understand Capote's feeling that she might have something to offer the stage. Her voice is pleasantly low-pitched. With her natural equipment it's a pity she waited so long.

"Oh this makeup!" she exclaimed, making clawing motions at her face as if to tear it off.

I asked if she were aware of all the good will there was for her down on the studio floor and among her fellow actors.

There was a level stare from the widely spaced eyes.

"I'm not conscious of getting any particular help," she said. "Everybody's simply doing the best they can."

Miss Bouvier will learn.

She said it was difficult doing the show in short takes—here again she did not seem to realize it was for her own benefit. She said she could stand criticism but she thought some of the Chicago reviews were unfair. "I realize it's because of who I am," she said. "I had lots of letters after Chicago, all of them friendly. One does get unpleasant letters from time to time but I didn't have any about my decision to go on the stage.

"I sometimes suspect people think I am doing this as a whim. But I have a lovely home in the country where I could be relaxing today. I could have slept late, enjoyed a leisurely breakfast, and instead, here I am. I got here at 8 o'clock this morning and I'll be here till 7 or 8 tonight, standing under the lights, making sure my feet are on the marks, checking my makeup and doing wardrobe fittings. I come home at night so exhausted that I fall into bed. Does this sound like a whim?"

I mentioned that Miss Francis and Stack (who had said, "They're making me look like Grandma Moses") had complained about the lighting. Miss Bouvier seemed surprised. She said the lights appeared all right to her. She said she had made several new friends and would miss Sanders, with whom she was so relaxed before the cameras that they ruined a couple of takes by bursting into laughter over a private joke.

Granger plays Miss Bouvier's lover. "She's working very hard," he said. "There are certain things she doesn't know because there's no reason why she should. It's a matter of training. She's learning." Stack said he found her uncomplicated and untemperamental. "It must be very difficult without background," said the star of The Untouchables. "But she doesn't seem to have any of the qualms that a beginner usually has."

Tense during rehearsals, Miss Bouvier relaxed during and after the taping, and admitted to self-doubts from time to time. But she is certain neither Capote nor Susskind would have risked his reputation if all she had was a name. She said she had no illusions that show business was easy, but if it was a case of the survival of the fittest, she thought she was tough enough to survive.

One interview raised a few eyebrows among the production staff.

"Sometimes when I've thought I was perfect, I've had to do [a scene] all over again," she was quoted as saying. "I've had to do what I was told. Next time I feel I'll be able to do it my way."

Well, as Granger said, she has a lot to learn about her new profession. But I don't buy the suggestion of a production aide: "Inside that Newport exterior is a frightened girl—come next week she could be the laughing stock of the country."

Lee Bouvier is already thinking about her next starring role. END

'Bwana Satellite' on Safari

By John Peer Nugent

The producer's account of how astronaut John Glenn retraced explorer Stanley's steps for a TV special

After you've traveled outer space, flown hot planes in a couple of wars, and run for the U.S. Senate, there aren't too many challenges left. John Glenn, who did all these things in 45 years, recently found a new one. He led a safari into the heart of Africa to retrace the steps of Henry Morton Stanley's famous 1871 search for Dr. David Livingstone.

As if that weren't challenge enough, Glenn did the whole trek with a TV camera on him, and a producer—me—whose only previous contact with the industry was ownership of a TV set.

This first in a series of specials called Great Explorations got started a year ago when Alan Landsburg of Wolper Productions came up with the idea of retracing some of the classic journeys of history—Captain Cook, Marco Polo, Cortez, Amundsen, Darwin—with a TV camera.

He immediately thought of John →

Route of safari across Tanzania

Glenn, America's first man to orbit the earth, as narrator and trek-leader. But Glenn was involved in half a dozen projects, including being chairman of the board of Royal Crown Cola International, Ltd., and an advisor to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. However, he not only liked the project, he saw it as an opportunity to explore a new career.

He had only one important proviso: The emphasis must be not on what the explorers did so much as what their discoveries did, or did not do, for the peoples and lands discovered. That proviso gave the series its lead theme.

I was brought into the act as the producer-writer because I had been an African correspondent during the early 1960's and now spend my time writing on and in Africa. What really sold me was the prospect of teaming up with Glenn on a bush hike.

We looked each other over for the first time in Glenn's room at the Waldorf in New York last April. After exchanging ideas and pipe tobaccos we agreed we might make a good combination. Neither one of us knew a thing about making a TV special. (He will be seen on NBC, Thursday.)

The rendezvous date was set: the East African republic of Tanzania in early June. I arrived a week early to organize the safari, brush up on my Swahili (I say, "Jambo"—Swahili for hello—for just about everything), and purchase such necessities as a green mamba snake-bite kit and spray bombs for the constant war with tsetse flies and anopheles mosquitoes.

Glenn arrived a few days later at our beach-site camp in Bagamoyo, the old mainland slave-trade port just across the shark-filled channel from Zanzibar.

I got that historic line out of my system early in the game: "Colonel Glenn, I presume," I said to the man in UN-blue shirt, wrinkled khakis, boots rugged enough for hiking up Kilimanjaro, and a belt holding a long-bladed hunting knife. His response was a quick glance at the knife.

The expedition started on June 7 and ended some five weeks later. It would cover nearly 1000 miles through the bush, a rugged journey that took Stanley more than eight months and cost him 16 black and white lives. We did it faster, with no fatalities (but some near misses), not because the route has changed much but because we could use for transport, besides aching feet, a flatcar here and there, and Land Rovers on occasion.

For Glenn's on-film traveling companion and bush guide I engaged Harold Prowse, a stocky, former professional hunter (also Phi Beta Kappa and Harvard Business School graduate) and now a consultant to the African Wildlife Leadership Foundation in Washington. Both were good at trekking and bad at small talk. They observed the rest of us with the detachment of owls. Both were thorough-going professionals and took the nonsense approach.

Early in the trek, as we were heading out of Morogoro toward the treacherous Mkata swamp, John was driving in the rear of our four-car convoy. He was disturbed at the lead car's high speed in the moonless night along a rutted road. He broke rank, raced up to the lead, and waved down the African driver, Juma.

"You're making good time, there," Glenn said informally. "By the way, where's the last car?"

Juma had not been watching and, in the dark and thick dust, did not recognize Glenn. "Oh," he said, "Bwana John is driving it behind."

"Well, don't drive too fast," said Glenn, "or you may lose him. He's a stranger here, you know."

"Nobody is going to lose the bwana," Juma assured Glenn. "He is satellite driver." From then on Glenn became "Bwana Satellite" to the whole crew.

Glenn was quick to improvise his own regulations. He balked at posed shots; he refused water not purified with a Halazone tablet, reasoning that if he got knocked out, we would all be in trouble; he demanded better rations for all the African workers.

Throughout the safari Glenn spent most evenings dialing around the world with a transistor radio. He was big on news from the British Broadcasting Corporation and Voice of America. When our Dutch cameraman, André Gunn, was not busy cleaning equipment, John would call him in to translate Radio Amsterdam's reports. If it was a slow evening, he'd like to get with us around the fire and sing solid favorites like "In the Evening by the Moonlight."

In crossing Tanzania, a nation three years new to African uhuru, or independence, we kept to the bush paths of Stanley's route, hoping not only to re-experience his challenges but to find new ones. When we were two weeks out and shooting elephant footage, we came upon a comely flock of TWA stewardesses on a sight-seeing safari. As John motored up to their tent camp, he looked at Harold and said: "Now if you tell these good looking gals I'm married, I'm going to use my elephant gun on you."

A troublesome rogue elephant had been ripping up the crops down in the desolate Ugalla river area, the very spot where Stanley turned rhapsodic in describing the vast herds of game. Glenn dropped it with two shots, chest and head. Rushing up to the downed great beast, he looked at it with gaunt respect.

"In the war, I had to kill and I didn't like it then," he said, oblivious to the shouts of congratulations. "I don't like it now either."

Naturally we all waited to see the ham in Glenn come out. The basic ingredients were certainly present—he was new in the business, and a big first could mean a long series. It never happened, although he did worry about looking like Gabby Hayes when he had to wear his floppy felt hunting hat for a scene. When he completed a particularly good shot, he would say, "Even a blind pig turns up an acorn once in a while."

As the safari drew to a close, I decided to make the return trip to Dar es Salaam in style—on a well-worn and patched DC-3 of East African Airways. We loaded our gear aboard at a dirt runway; perhaps a few kilos overweight but then the local scales were perhaps off, the British pilot decided.

After several hours of jolting flight, John unstrapped himself and went forward to the cockpit to have a go at bush flying.

I was sitting in the rear jump seat. Next to me was the neat young African steward, just finishing some curried chicken. As the plane made an uncommonly soft touchdown on the lumpy runway, his eyes popped.

"Ah, bwana, but that is not the landing of one of our pilots," he said. (END)

You, Your child AND Television

Common-sense advice from a noted psychologist

By Dr. Haim G. Ginott

I have a long-term quarrel with television about the image of the adult it sells to children. Children are childish; therefore adults must be adultish. On TV, too many adults appear childish. I find it unseemly for that lovable old man to bet, lose, and then grab another potato chip from a small child. He should have controlled himself. I resent smart little boys who give advice to their elders on how to live. I'd rather learn from my own adult mistakes.

There ought to be a law against advertising by children, with double trouble for nagging sales kids. I would exile to a very hot place that little boy who at the top of his lungs calls for, "More Park's sausages, Mom." I would bar ads that make apes out of parents and smart alecks out of children. I would not allow a youngster to teach his father what is good for him.

Just as cigaret commercials are not likely to add to longevity, immature commercials do not contribute to mental health. In one ad a man old enough to be a father runs wild to get some gooey candy bars, while seductive voices urge him to "give in, to the taste..." After such indulgence he won't stay in running condition for long. While the father may only gain weight, his child may lose character. Unlike adults, children are pliant: They become what they live. They absorb experience, internalize it, assimilate it and make it part of their personality. It is important, therefore, that what children experience be consistent with the adult's best values.

On one quiz show a mother won $500. The emcee said, "Aren't you going to kiss the money?" She did not hesitate a moment. In front of her children, she kissed each bill, while the band played on. I felt sad, wondering about the influence of mother's performance on her children's values and conduct.

For the sponsors, children are a perfect target. They are suggestible and gullible. They learn jingles with amazing ease and are only too happy to oblige the announcer and pester their parents with sales slogans. "This fabulous toy is only $19.95. Every boy and girl should have it."

The Selection of Programs

Parents feel two ways about television. They like the fact that it keeps the children occupied, but they are concerned about its impact on the child's personality. Child-care experts give contradictory opinions.

1. Television is good for children. Violence acted out dramatically helps children get rid of hostile urges.

2. Television is bad for children. It engenders a lust for violence and makes children insensitive to human suffering.

3. Television has little effect on children. Personality and values are shaped by parents and peers, not by images on a screen.

On one fact all agree: Television consumes a significant part of a child's day. More of his time is spent with the TV set than with his father or mother. Even if spectacles of sex and brutality were nothing more than innocent fun, they would keep children from more constructive activities.

An increasing number of parents feel that the choice of programs cannot be left entirely to the child. They reserve the right to exclude undesirable guests from their living room. They are not willing to allow thugs and bigots to keep their children company. I am in sympathy with parents who believe that television, like medication, is best taken at prescribed times and in measured amounts. Parents have a right to protect their young children from daily doses of sordid sex and vivid violence. They have a duty to prevent exposure to scenes of bloodshed that are preceded and followed by jolly jingles. While children need not be sheltered from all tragedy, they should be protected from entertainment in which man's brutality to man is not a tragedy but a formula.

Parents are resigned to the fact that television is here to stay. They want to know, however, how to cope with it; how to minimize its harm, how to augment its benefits. Here are some answers to questions that parents ask.

Discipline and Television

In the modern home, television, like food, is provided to a child as a matter of course. It is not a reward for good behavior, nor is it withheld arbitrarily for misbehavior. It should not be used as a threat over a child's head to exert pressure for achievement and obedience.

To a child, threats are invitations to repeat a forbidden act. They challenge his autonomy and push him to transgress again in order to prove to himself and us that he is no weakling. Instead of threats, parents can offer choices. "You can watch TV and come for dinner when called or you can give up the privilege of watching TV. You decide."

If no results follow, we turn off the TV saying: "I see you decided to give up television." Thus we place the responsibility squarely on the child. We refuse to argue. We do not beg or plead. We do not explain how hard we worked, or how grateful he → should be for a hot meal.

The children's room was in shambles: Toys, shirts, shoes, socks were all over the floor. Two children stormed in:

CHILDREN: Mom, can we watch television?

MOTHER (loud and clear): There are toys and clothes on the playroom floor.

Instead of the usual, "They are not mine," the answer was action. They picked up their belongings and stowed them away.

CHILDREN: Now can we watch TV?
"Of course," came mother's gracious answer.

Homework and Television

Like a dessert, television is allowed only after the main course. In a home where scholarship is valued, homework must come first if there is to be TV later. The child is neither nagged nor prodded. He is offered a choice:

"Andy, you have two choices: One, homework right after school; two, homework after dinner before TV." If a child resists, he is offered a stiffer choice: "You can do your homework and then enjoy TV, or you can give up television altogether. You decide."

Children appreciate our firmness, even when they protest against it. The following incident was told by a mother of a 12-year-old. "My son Gary watches more TV than I really approve of. The other night he asked if his TV time could be extended to 10 P.M. I answered that his bedtime could be extended, but TV had to be off at 9:30. He became angry. He told me that I was unreasonable and could never see his point of view. He continued arguing while I just restated his TV deadline. When I began to feel that I was losing control of myself, I walked upstairs and disconnected the set. That ended the argument instantly.

"That night Gary called me into his room and told me that he didn't want to watch so much TV, but that he lacked the will power to stop. He would rather apply himself to his school work and get higher grades. Since that night he has been studying much harder."

Bedtime and Television

In many homes, bedtime becomes bedlam time. Parents and children form a mutual frustration society. Children try to watch TV as late as possible, while parents want them bedded down as soon as possible. The evening becomes prime-nagging time for mothers, and tactical-evasion time for children. It is best that father, rather than mother, enforce the bedtime laws. The rule should be stated tersely and firmly: "At 8 (or 9 or 10) o'clock, all TV is turned off." The tone should carry a clear message: "This demand is for real. I mean business."

Protests are par for the course. They are expected and tolerated, but the rule is upheld. Our answers should consist of sympathetic grunts: "Ooooooh . . . mmmmm . . . I see." We refuse to argue or to be put on the defensive. We owe no explanation beyond the firm statement of the limit.

Here is an example of dealing with a resistant child:

CHILD: But why can't I watch another hour?

FATHER: You tell me why.

CHILD: I don't know.

FATHER: I have enough faith in your ability to figure it out.

CHILD: You think I'll be tired tomorrow?

FATHER: You figured it out. Good night, Son.

Special Occasions

On special occasions a child should be permitted to watch TV past his bedtime. In fact, parents may bring to his attention important late programs and give him permission to watch them if he so desires. Our free and gracious offer cannot but confer recognition on our child and reassure him of our interest and love.

Problems Becloud Next Season

Don't be surprised if nothing very fresh and innovative turns up in evening TV series next fall. Unless the networks are keeping something up their sleeves—which is possible but unlikely—the new prime-time-shows next season will be just more of the familiar stuff. Indeed, the entertainment programmers, now only a month or so away from the midwinter ritual of locking in their September lineups, are on the horns of an agonizing dilemma: On the one hand, they are convinced it is too risky and expensive to try the untried. On the other hand, they feel that just about every variation in a known successful series formula has already been used. "Hollywood is panic-stricken. Nobody knows which way to turn next," a network program executive reported the other day on returning to New York from the West Coast. He was, of course, merely reflecting his own quandary. One of the problems has been the success of prime-time movies, which have been rugged competition for all but a few programs, with the exception of entrenched favorites like Gomer Pyle, Beverly Hillbillies, Bonanza and Lucy, to name some. These, heaven and the networks know, can't go on forever. Nothing new seems to have a chance even of surviving against the flicks except situation-comedy and variety shows. Endless added variations on the half-hour nonsense abound, but the only new song-dance-&-skit items in sight are those currently being launched by Jonathan Winters on CBS and Rowan and Martin on NBC. Westerns have fallen on such hard times that only one new one is in the hopper at each network, which is perhaps an all-time low in oater pilots, and no certainty exists that any will make the final shape-up. The only major star posed for the weekly TV plunge is Doris Day. In sum, next season's outlook is not one of innovation.

The Mighty Miamian has dealt CBS a bitter pill. While the network is glad to have him just agree to stick around, Jackie Gleason, who dictates the terms of his employment, has found his popular "Honeymooners" sequences too much work and won't do any of them next season. The network has settled for 20 straight variety shows which, as someone close to the situation observed, "Jackie evidently feels he can just ad-lib." A final "Honeymooners" show is to be taped this week before the supporting cast (Art Carney, Sheila MacRae and Jane Kean) bow off the show. Two others taped earlier, along with this one, will be saved over to sweeten next season's Saturday nights. This year Gleason had to crank out 11 "Honeymooners." They've been his best shows.

A question tantalizing TV circles has finally produced a surprising answer: Not ABC, as rumored, but NBC will add a third "movie night," on Mondays, beginning next fall. What happens to the various NBC shows now seen in the time period has not been determined.

LETTERS

Correspondence for this department should be addressed to Letters Department, TV GUIDE, Radnor, Pa., 19088. All letters must be signed. Names withheld upon request.

VIEWER SERVICE

If you wish to write comments to those in charge of a specific show, you should send your letters to: (Name of Show), TV GUIDE Viewer Service, Box 800, Radnor, Pa., 19088. These letters will be forwarded to proper executives.

ALWAYS ON SATURDAYS

I am a young mother very much upset about the Saturday morning cartoon shows. These cartoons are filled with horrible monsters, laser beams, giant insects, man-eating plants and mighty supermen. Young preschool children think the world is really filled with these things.

Mrs. Ron Hoover Salina, Kan.

Now that we're starting a new year, how about doing something about some of these cartoons shown on Saturday morning?

Mrs. J. R. Miller DePere, Wis.

Our children find out early enough in life what hate and malice is, so it shouldn't be brought to them through these so-called cartoons.

*Mrs. T. J. McGill
Lincoln Park, N.J.*

Some viewers—and their parents—simply prefer Mickey Mouse to the mighty monsters. If our networks were to present more variety and a chance to choose between monsters and mouse, we parents would not be so upset. But, in the few hours between 8 and 11:30 A.M., there are at least 13 half-hour shows with stories based on superheroes (and supervillains). And there are at least two half-hour intervals where every major network offers nothing but these glorified horror shows. Please don't tell us to turn off our TV sets. As parents, we are glad the television can offer our children some quiet recreation on weekend mornings. Of course, we could turn off the TV. And we could stop buying the sponsors' products. But we would prefer to continue buying them—if they could make us more satisfied customers, via the television shows they sponsor.

Crystal, Minn.*

[TV GUIDE devotes considerable space to these letters as representative of many received from parents protesting the character of many Saturday morning cartoon shows.—Ed.]

FUMBLE

Frankly I am so fed up with football games I could scream!

*Charles A. Westfall

Why must we be subjected to football game after football game for two whole days every weekend?

Patricia McClintic Jeffersonville, Ind.

I've sat at home Saturday after Saturday afternoon and steamed because channel after channel has nothing but sports to offer.

Mrs. Jim Grace Shepherd, Mich.

THIS WEEK'S MOVIES

By Judith
Crist

THE BIRDS (NBC), Saturday
THAT TOUCH OF MINK (NBC), Tuesday
THE PLEASURE SEEKERS (ABC), Wednesday
TOPKAPI (CBS), Thursday
A SHOT IN THE DARK (CBS), Friday

In some areas network movies may not be seen on the days indicated.

With Alfred Hitchcock's feathered fiends and Peter Sellers' Inspector Clouseau as pure lagnappe, this network-movie week has it made simply by offering us "Topkapi." All else is gravy, good, bad or indifferent.

The main course is Jules Dassin's comedy-thriller, one of the moviest movies around, a lush and lovely confection of things cinematic: A plot to fascinate you, a cast to captivate you, a script to satisfy you on both the sophisticated and simple-minded pleasure levels, beautiful color and a 40-minute suspense sequence to knock you for a loop provided, hopefully, that the film shavers (the movie runs 120 minutes uncut) know when to leave perfection alone. And all this to the tunes of Manos Hadjidakis, the "Never On Sunday" music man. The gang in this bit of superjewel thievery includes a lush and lovely Melina Mercouri as a girl-about-the-Continent; Maximilian Schell as her amour, Robert Morley as a mad inventor, Peter Ustinov as their fall guy and Akim Tamiroff as besottedly berserk cook.

Peter Sellers is ostensibly on the side of the law as the inspector in "A Shot in the Dark," repeating the role of the lovably inept bungler he originated in "The Pink Panther." Even an idiotic script and frenetic and repetitious direction can't squelch Sellers' genius and his solution—or dissolution—of the murder case, wherein all the suspects are blown to bits, is well worth waiting for.

Hitchcock's feathered fiends are the true stars of "The Birds," a tedious opus while the humans hold the stage during the calm before the abnorm. But when those winged creatures come to the fore the blandness of Tippi Hedren and stolidity of Rod Taylor are overshadowed and Hitchcockian terror takes over triumphantly. It's enough to make you kick the next pigeon you come across.

So much for the good gravy of the week—unless your are a devotee of comedies extolling Doris Day the eternal virgin. This time it's Cary Grant, rather than Rock Hudson, who's out to get our girl with "That Touch of Mink," but never fear for Doris, who remains chaste until the preacher's done his bit—and, in this case, thereafter, thanks to a case of hives for Mr. G. And you can develop your own case of hives with "The Pleasure Seekers," a gravityless mess of mush about that eternal trio of American girls abroad in search of sex. No coins in this fountain; the setting is Spain, the scenery's pretty and the whole thing a bore. But Melina & Co. are paradise enow for the week.

The special replacing the week's sixth movie, is, once again, a non-movie that has been a movie, many times over, in fact. Jack Palance will be following the footsteps of John Barrymore, Fredric March and Spencer Tracy into the schizophrenia of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Can you answer these 5 questions about the news?

- 1) Is DMZ something you associate with fire power or flower power?
- 2) Who play the title roles in Bonnie and Clyde?
- 3) What famous amateur tennis tournament will be open to professionals for the first time this year?
- 4) Once largely ceremonial, the office of President of the U.S.S.R. has gained stature under what man?
- 5) Some young women now wear skirts shorter than miniskirts. What are these skirts called?

The answers are: 1) Fire power, (the demilitarized zone in Viet Nam), 2) Warren Beatty, Faye Dunaway, 3) Wimbledon, 4) Nikolai Podgorny, 5) Microskirts

If you scored high on this little quiz, you're precisely the kind of alert, perceptive reader TIME is written for.

But if you missed a few questions, chances are that you don't have quite as firm a grasp of the news as you'd like. So now's the time to try TIME.

Start spending just one evening a week with TIME's 22 news and feature sections, and watch what happens.

Facts—fast. Scientific data from outer space and the latest logistics from Viet Nam will become part of your conversation. You'll know which star-studded musical just flopped and what new novelist has written a book to remember.

In no time at all, TIME stocks your mind with quotes, quips, anecdotes. It gives you facts and figures to form opinions worth listening to. It's fun. Start to glance at just a page or two; next thing you know you're hooked for the evening on psychopop and cybernetics, symphonies and saints. Finding out in TIME makes finding out fun. No need to read between the lines. TIME tells the news with warmth, wit and clarity. Knowing you know. Reading TIME gives you the very special feeling of knowing you know. It's a habit you'll never want to break—a habit shared by all sorts of movers and shakers in this world.

CLOSE-UP

7:30 7 13 JACQUES COUSTEAU SPECIAL

SPECIAL COLOR Oceanographer Jacques Cousteau investigates the shark—the most feared and hated of all the creatures of the sea.

In this first special of the 12-part "Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau" (to be telecast over three years), Cousteau's research ship Calypso visits the Red Sea, where Cousteau, his son Philippe and Eugenie Clark study these terrifying and unpredictable fish. Films show sharks being tagged (an aid in tracing their movement patterns); experiments with speared fish, fresh meat and other targets (to learn the sights, sounds and smells that attract them); tests of chemical repellents; a "shark frenzy" (a violent group-attack on a victim); and experiments with large plastic bags (designed to protect the wearer by preventing sharks from picking up his scent in the water).

No man knows our underwater world like Jacques-Yves Cousteau. A man of science with the heart of an adventurer, Captain Cousteau brings you face to face with the breathtaking beauty, the swift perils of a world few have ever seen.

Tonight, "Sharks," first in a series of four reality specials. Co-produced by David Wolper. Sponsored by B. F. Goodrich.

7:30 3 4 7 8 GREAT EXPLORATIONS

SPECIAL COLOR Astronaut John Glenn follows the trail of Henry Stanley, the journalist-adventurer who penetrated the jungles of Tanganyika (now Tanzania) to find David Livingstone, the Scottish missionary and explorer.

In Tanzania, cameras retrace Stanley's path (see the map on page 10)—from Bagamoyo, a port on the Indian Ocean, to Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika, where he delivered his famous line "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?" The journey, plagued by mutiny, bandits, disease and death, took eight months in 1871. Excerpts from Stanley's diary contrast the trek with Glenn's expedition, which covered the ground in five weeks.

Cameraman André Gunn filmed "Bwana Satellite's" 1000-mile trip, capturing encounters with native hunters, school children, attacks by mosquitoes and tsetse flies, and the exotic terrain. Also: a sequence of Glenn shooting a rogue elephant.

6 9 NET FESTIVAL—Art

Pablo Picasso, master of modern art, has always been a sculptor as well as a painter—yet his sculpture has been a little-known side of his genius. This program explores Picasso's sculpture, which he refused to exhibit until this year. The focus is on the 50-foot, 163-ton steel colossus he created for Chicago's Civic Center Plaza. The evolution of Picasso's style is traced in a brief tour of his first major sculpture exhibition. Also: interviews with Sir Roland Penrose (Picasso's biographer) and architect William F. Hartmann, prime movers behind the commissioning of the Chicago work. (Rerun; 60 min.)

This program will be followed by the short "Jail Keyes Made Here," a humorous film montage of incongruous signs.

KEEP THOSE MAD SCIENTISTS COMING

If they're flamboyant, maniacal and macabre, they're right at home in 'The Wild Wild West'

(We don't know how our man, Dick Hobson, in Hollywood came by this "confidential memorandum," and we'd just as soon never find out. We do know, however, that he was born with his tongue in his cheek and he's perfectly capable of making the whole thing up.—Ed.)

TO: Wild Wild West PRODUCER

BRUCE LANSBURY.

FROM: PROGRAM DEPT.

Bruce, you'll never believe this but the critics here have been hollering their heads off. They say there's something slightly "unsavory," slightly "nasty," slightly "kinky," slightly "perverse," slightly "odious," slightly "repellent" about Wild Wild West.

They're accusing us of the very thing we've been trying so hard to achieve!

I say, keep up that stream of evil Iagos! Let them be cheerfully and happily bad! Nobody will ever remember Ironside's sniveling baddies with their "human" failings, their "psychology." Nobody savors High Chaparral's boring badmen. Keep our villains flamboyant! Maniacal! Nietzschean!

Give us more of those mad assassins, those crazed medicine men leading packs of wolves, those demented geologists setting off earthquakes to conquer the world. They're just "villainous" enough not to scare off the viewers.

As for the critics' charge of "exotic and excruciatingly painful forms of violence": Granted, WWW has dynamited more interior and exterior sets in three years than in the whole previous history of the image-orthicon tube. Granted, Bob Conrad is the only TV hero who fistfights 46 adversaries in 46 minutes (not counting commercials and station breaks). Granted, we indulge in more tumultuous mayhem than all other TV Westerns combined.

But to show how demoniacal our villains are, we have to depict them at their best—correction, "worst." And if the story lines get snarled, we have to "eliminate" some human obstacles. Just keep knocking 'em off, buster. The Front Office is right behind you.

Dr. Fredric Wertham claims that 5-year-olds have actually shot at the video tube with their fathers' guns. That an adolescent girl strangled a 6-year-old with a stocking "after watching a TV mystery program." That boys have broken kids' arms and legs with wrestling holds they "learned from rough television shows."

Don't listen to the scare-mongers!

The Nielsen families may be opposed to violence, but they are nonetheless eager to see all the harmless details. Show them your bottomless pit. Swing open your Iron Maiden. Let them see your swinging knife-edged pendulum while your torturer symbolically peels a peach in the foreground. Then set up a cliff-hanger escape, nobody gets hurt, and you have altruistically provided Nielsen's 1150 frustrated families with a socially harmless outlet for their murderous inner impulses.

Go Gothic! Be baroque! Hang crystal chandeliers in your eerie caves. Put stained-glass portholes in your flying saucers. And thank your Stars for 1870. How would you like to be stuck with U.N.C.L.E.'s tiresome electronics?

Gimmick it up with your steam-powered wheel chairs with their quaint little boilers and pistons. Your puppet-show marionettes firing guns at Supreme Court justices. Your underwater "dragons" shooting off torpedoes. Give it the old surface-credibility.

But please don't strain our viewers with "problems of life." Don't tax them with those Matt-Dillon-style seminars around the coffee cups with the whys, wherefores, and whereases. Did you catch our time slot opposition trying to "humanize" Tarzan?—that's a laugh. And none of that cloying Pa-Cartwright-Ma-Barkley familial gush. Human beings are black or white; ours are.

Just keep Jim West simple and uncomplicated, his face a mask. It takes a great many muscles to make a smile; make sure Conrad doesn't use more than two or three. Obviously, West is never to fall in love, nor even to show compassion (Napoleon Solo to the contrary notwithstanding). If his best friend should die, let him mutter, "What a waste!" and forge straight ahead.

In the fourth act we want a bang-bang-you're-dead climax. No crocodile tears when the legless maniac gets his. Don't bother to ease the viewers back into their comfortable sentimentality.

Cleanse West of personal idiosyncracies, making it easy for viewers to project their own psyches. His big fights should always be against a multiplicity of villains. Incidentally, I know you won't forget how great Bobby looks with his shirt off. Strip him to the waist at least once per episode.

Should any of us ever stop to question the significance of all this in the larger scale of human values, we can just remind ourselves that we are depicting the forces of Good in a world of Evil, and everything will be all right.

Sponsors want to reach consumers. Consumers are square. Squares like their action-adventure straight. Never alienate that vast underbelly of viewers by playing for cheap laughs or trying to kid your own thing. Batman with its corny put-ons cut back to one show a week. I Spy with its cutesy-boos is slipping (grown men are not "cute"). Remember what happened to one of our WWW ex-producers, Collier Young, when he couldn't resist camping it up? Three of his spoof-type episodes and he was out on his can.

Object lesson number two: Remember our battles with WWW's flamboyant originator, the late Mike Garrison! How we had to send in eight producers in one year—more than any television series before or since—to help us clamp a brake on Garrison's outrageous excesses! Here was a show supposedly set in U.S. Grant's Administration coming on with plastic explosives, canisters of radioactive materials and computer dating! All this concurrent with the Franco-Prussian War! Like wow, man, that's why we had to put a solid Joe like you in this spot.

Admittedly, we here at Management were so obfuscated at the beginning of the current season we goofed but good. But you came through with exactly what we ordered, Bruce—a return to the Old West. Well, we looked at our first six "Westerns"—Mexican bandits, ghost towns, Indian massacres—the teepees, the cactus, the dust. Forget we opened our mouth. We'll slip those six dogs in with the season's output. Maybe nobody will notice.

Despite everything, we've managed to win our time slot this year. Congratulations. And we're grooving in the Nielsen "demographics." The statistics show they dig us in practically all categories: males, females, the 12-17's, the 18-34's, the over 50's. We knew you had it in you, Bruce. All you had to do, tiger, was let it come out. (END)

BAKED BEEF AND BEER ROULADEN

Serves 8

8  $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch-thick slices of round steak
Salt and pepper
8 bacon slices
8 bay leaves
3 tbsp. whole pickling spice
16 small onion slices
8 parsley sprigs
String or toothpicks

$\frac{1}{4}$  cup oil or shortening
2 cans (8 oz. each) tomato sauce
1 can (12 oz.) beer
1 tsp. sugar
8 carrots, sliced
3 cups sliced celery
2 cups fresh, frozen or canned peas

Sprinkle steak slices with salt and pepper. At one end of each steak put 1 bay leaf, 1 bacon slice, 1 teaspoon pickling spice, 2 onion slices and a parsley sprig. Roll up like a jelly roll and fasten with string or toothpicks. Brown the rolls on all sides in hot oil. Remove rolls to a well-greased casserole, shallow enough to hold all in a single layer with sauce and room for vegetables when they are added.

Mix tomato sauce, beer and sugar. Pour over rolls. Cover tightly and bake in a preheated moderate oven (350° F.) for 1 hour, adding water from time to time to prevent sticking and maintain volume of liquid. Remove casserole from oven, remove cover and add the raw vegetables. Replace cover, put casserole on top of range over very low heat. Raise oven temperature to 425° F. and put Yorkshire pudding into oven. Continue to simmer casserole gently while pudding bakes.

YORKSHIRE PUDDING

Serves 8

3 eggs
 $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups milk
1 tsp. salt

$1\frac{1}{2}$  cups all-purpose flour
 $\frac{1}{2}$  cup (1 stick) butter or margarine

Combine eggs, milk, salt and flour. Beat with a rotary beater until smooth and well blended. Melt butter in a 9x13x2-inch baking pan. Pour batter into hot butter. Bake in a preheated hot oven (425° F.) for 35 to 40 minutes or until brown and crusty. Cut into squares to serve. Serve beef rouladen with vegetables. Spoon pan juices over Yorkshire pudding.

The same group which was responsible for The Dick Van Dyke Show—Bill Persky, Sam Denoff, Sheldon Leonard and Carl Reiner—worked on this show. But obviously not very hard. Most shows have at least an idea, even if not a very good one. Apparently the idea of this show is not to have any idea at all. Just have five characters in search of an offer. Two of them are men, a radio disc jockey team—one married, of course, and the other un. And, as usual, the big bad boss, the little wife, and finally—who else?—the next-door-neighbor, the girl who's just dying to marry the . . . Ah, but we mustn't spoil it for you.

The show is also billed as having four "stars"—which really means no stars. The best of them is the "nice guy" discotalker, Joby Baker, who somehow manages to get some real fun into his role as the happily married David Lewis. As for his harried side-kick, Ronnie Schell, he comes on strong as the bad guy, Larry—you know, the one who is so bone-rotten he wants to stay single, at least for the run of the series. (Our guess is he'll make it in a walk.) Then there's Billy De Wolfe, as the boss, Mr. Hutton, who, as he mugs and shrugs his way through his role, bugs Ronnie for playing so much rock 'n' roll. Finally, there are the girls—Julie Parrish, who gives long shrift to her role as the short-suffering newlywed, and Goldie Hawn (Sandy), who loves Ronnie not just for himself, but for herself too.

In a typical episode, Larry makes

Sandy beneficiary of his airline insurance—something he makes a habit of doing for a lot of girls because he finds that on the next date it makes them very appreciative. When Sandy gets too appreciative, however, he tells her he can't marry her because the doctor has told him he doesn't know how long he has to live. "The important thing," he says, "is to live each day to the hilt—with a smile on your face—like Ben Gazzara." All this is fine and good fun—until those sports David and Linda have to make a federal case out of it, and then the show falls flat. Another episode held up a good deal better—in fact, to the end. In this one, Mr. Hutton gets a contract which demands that David and Larry do their program from the Sunshine Dude Ranch. But Mr. Hutton has gotten it wrong—by one letter. It's the Sunshine Nude Ranch. In the best scene, David and Larry finally get up nerve enough to go down to dinner—which they do early so they won't have to enter in front of the others. After they're seated at their table, the others enter—dressed to the hilt.

All of which proves, we guess, that if you've got no basic idea for your show, then you've at least got to come up each episode with something pretty new and different. To its credit, this show often does. But how much easier it would have been if all those smart fellows had come up with just a little idea to begin with—not a big one, mind you, just a teensy weensy little one.

WELL, HE DID FIND BROOKLYN

But Heywood Hale Broun isn't so sure about his career

By Robert Higgins

"One of the first things I did upon becoming an actor," Heywood Hale Broun once wrote, "was to begin planning the movie which was to commemorate my 50th year on the stage." Broun saw it as a prestige short subject, the kind that's shown in East Side art houses before the French picture. It would simply be called "Broun" and there'd be lots of Beethoven-y music and tributes from lesser stage folk.

But Heywood Hale Broun, at 49, is still 34 years (and a few hundred fat parts) shy of the anniversary movie. His wit and intelligence are very much in evidence now, however, in his role as that droll and incisive sports essayist on CBS's Saturday Evening News. Broun is no mere score spieler. According to Evening News producer Paul Greenberg, Broun's sports coverage is "unique" and aimed at "those with only a slight interest in sports" right up to the buffs who "still want to learn something." Learn they do, about things ranging from what it's like to go fox hunting in New Jersey, to the origins of polo (Broun says it started in ancient Persia). Add some affectionally barbed observations—such as the way Swarthmore College's egg-head grid stars often "leave a field strewn with contact lenses"—and you have some idea why Broun may be the best ball-park brightener to come along since bottled beer.

Looking about as athletic at wet alfalfa, Broun is a 5-foot-7 bag-of-bones who reminds you of the Cowardly Lion gone bald—except for a rather outlandish handle-bar mustache which Broun says he grew "so people wouldn't think my bony nose extends to my knees."

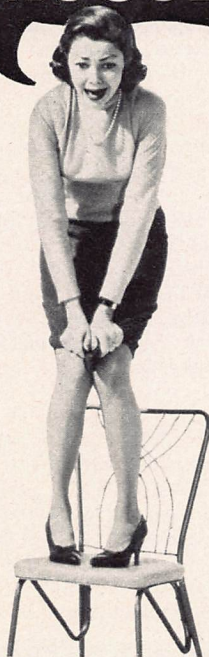

Besides his acting and his chores on CBS News, Broun has been a sports-writer, book reviewer, columnist, lecturer (on theater in colleges), essayist ("A Studied Madness") and record company owner (hot jazz). Says Broun: "That's either a richly varied career or an indecisive series of zig-zags." It's been both. Julie Leonard, his agent and long-time friend, explains: "Woody has spent a great part of his life searching for identity." The trip has been somewhat wild, marked by Chaplinesque pratfalls along the way.

Born the only son of Ruth Hale, a Lucy Stoner and newspaperwoman, and Heywood Broun, one of the titans of journalism, Broun's battle for identity started early. He landed his first newspaper job on New York's PM in 1940, the year after his father died. "Father was a tough act to follow," Broun remembers. "Sentimental → old men were constantly reminding me to remember what a great newspaperman my father was—to remember my heritage." Broun made out OK, but a lot of seasoned legmen on PM must have had their doubts. The newspaper was in Brooklyn across the river from his native Manhattan and when Broun got the call to report for work, he had to confess to a problem. Says he: "I had no idea where Brooklyn was."

On the paper he was assigned to sports. No expert ("I didn't know how to fill out a score card"), Broun developed eventually into one of the most knowledgeable of sportswriters, but those early days didn't help his need for identity much. "I can remember," he says, "trailing the players out of the ball park and hearing one autograph-hungry kid say to another, 'Who's that guy? Is he anybody?' 'Naw,' the other said, 'See? He's carrying a typewriter.'"

Broun stashed the typewriter in 1941. He was drafted and assigned to the field artillery but spent most of his time learning the Yugoslavian tongue in a classroom.

Out of the Army in '45, Broun went back to PM, where, after many fizzled-out starts, he not only gained recognition as a writer but, he recalls joyously, "achieved every newspaperman's dream—my name on the side of the truck. It read, 'Hard-Hitting Story by Heywood Hale Broun.'" But Broun was in for another pratfall: It was PM's last edition before folding.

That did it. In 1949 the writer decided to become an actor. "As an actor," he explains, "it wouldn't matter whose son I was. I would stand or fall on my own." He had never acted outside of amateur stuff and was 31, a bit long in the tooth to be starting a new career. And it wasn't just the need "to stand or fall" on his own that motivated him. Mrs. Broun, actress Jane Lloyd-Jones, points out: "Woody was attracted to the family feeling that actors have in a play. Writing is a lonely job and Woody was a lonely boy."

He was. Brought up, he explains, "during the budding of child psychology," the young Broun was "treated like a little man" when what he wanted was "guidance." He received little guidance from Broun Sr. "Father was an aloof man," he remembers, "with great courage behind a typewriter, but almost impossible to talk to on an intimate level."

Broun got his first acting job in 1949 through a pal of his, Phil Silvers, but despite an impressive work record in over a dozen Broadway plays ("Bells Are Ringing," "Take Her, She's Mine") and more TV shows (The Defenders, Patty Duke) than he can remember, his name isn't exactly a household word. Mostly because he plays minor parts—"janitors, druggists and cowardly sheriffs," he says.

There are those, however, who feel Broun may have followed the wrong road. "He should be writing exclusively," says Julie Leonard. "Woody's as good a writer as his father. But he always underrates himself."

Be that as it may, Broun has no intention of budging off the boards. Many sportswriters would undoubtedly give their good right arms to be in Broun's position with CBS (no dumb assignments, great exposure and only a few days' work a week). But Broun would blow it all in a minute if, he says, "a good part happened." He contends, "Acting gives me the kind of pleasure I've sought for half of my life."

Still, Broun's old bugaboo, the memory of his famous father, crops up now and then. He can handle it. He once auditioned for a Truman Capote play and Capote, upon hearing his name, twirled: "How nice for you, named for the famous writer." Bantered Broun: "How nice for you, named for the famous President." END

A medically sound treatment for painful hemorrhoids

First, stop the pain. And the itching.

Nupercainal® is a unique combination of lubricants plus the most effective topical pain killer available without a prescription. It relieves pain and itching fast. Provides much longer lasting relief. Nupercainal also soothes inflamed tissue—in turn helps the natural healing process. Moreover Nupercainal facilitates natural movements.

Next, doctors recommend, use common sense. Stay off spicy, highly seasoned foods. Avoid constipation and what causes it. Such as lack of rest and bad eating habits. Stay regular. Sitz baths aid comfort and natural healing.

Above all, use caution. Nupercainal brings relief in most cases and for most types of hemorrhoids. But if symptoms are severe, persistent, frequently recurrent...if there is rectal bleeding...do see your doctor.
